
A Symbol of Japanese Human Right

Bui An Tho MD, the Hepatobiliarypancreatic Surgery Department, Cho Ray Hospital, Vietnam

University of Tsukuba Hospital - October8, 2015

At University of Tsukuba Hospital, There are equipped many newest model and high quality medical instruments. The patients have been treated with the highest medicine standard in the World. Japanese Doctors and Nurses take care their patients very good, friendly and respectably without distinguished they are rich or poor, high or low

In operation room, a laparoscopic segment hepatectomy position. In here the patients are quietly safe and happy. There is a big budget for investing medical equipments, drugs and running the hospital but the patients just pay a small hospital fee if it is compared to another developed Asia country as Singapore, Hong Kong. Japanese doctors think that medicine is not a business, they work very hard to take care their patient the best and sacrifice their life and time for themselves and family. Their salary is not much but they always try to serve the patients and training for residents and students. It is a symbol of Japanese human right.

Some pictures:

Morning round in K8W

Relax time at Tsukuba University Campus